GREATEST BABY ON EARTH

Now a Year Old and Cutting His Royal Teeth.

He Has Equerries, Ladies in Waiting, Special Trains and Gold Crowns.

HE greatest baby in the world is now about 1 year old. Every man, woman and child on earth has heard of his existence, but very few indeed there are who know what he looks like or how he is being cared for. The name of this baby is Edward. He is His Royal Highness, the Prince Edward, of York, heir to the throne of an empire on which the sun never sets, and he is now cutting his teeth.

His Royal Highness lives either at York House, St. James, London, or at White Lodge, seat of the Tecks. A description of his personal appearance is now on file in the royal archives of the Tower of London, and he has been photographed 109 times. These details are not trifles. They are a part of the history of the British empire. On June 23 the Court Circular of England announced that His Royal Highness had said "ba-ba" distinctly three consecutive times on June 19.

The Prince has blue eyes. His hair is not scanty by any means, and he is rather fat, as will be seen from the accompanying picture of him, which is the 109th of His Royal Highness and the very latest, being taken when he was a year old, and he is very little over that age now. He has a nursery of the most severely plain character, and although his little life is one long unintermitted ceremony, etiquette requires that the plainest of baby accessories shall surround him. He is under the tutelage of one Mademoiselle Buika, whom all England knows as the confidential companion of the Princess May before her marriage. This Mademoiselle Buika has naturally an enormous responsibility.

His Royal Highness is already a general, a patent for the purpose. Even the physician who attends him must receive a royal patent before beginning to physic this babe. Every article of attire he wears must bear the royal arms worked by hand in silk, and he may not wear the same article twice in succession. It must be washed before it goes on again.

His Highness travels by special train. He has six equerries and a gentleman under of the black rod. He receives invitations to all royal and state functions, and is always represented at them by one of these equerries.

So far he has been pretty healthy, but at present the royal physicians are not fully supplied with teeth. Therefore, anxiety is still felt on the subject of his physical condition. His hair is likewise deemed uncommonly thick for a Prince of York at one year of age. They had it cut by royal patent on June 3 last, but unfortunately it only grew thicker. There is also a spot on the nose of the royal neck, which is understood to be a birth mark. But the baby does not cry a bit. He laughs and crows, on the contrary, and kicked Queen Victoria in the face at York House on May 29, 1895, being the only member of the human race ever known to have perpetrated such a deed. For details, see the court calendar, which is a very good history of this prince's life, and prints columns about him constantly. He is always added to in that publication as His Royal Highness, Prince Edward of York.

It would amaze the average mind to be made aware of the army of dealers in infants' food who claim to be purveyors to H. R. H. One would suppose he never could put so many different brands into his royal stomach. Yet every one of the dealers asserts that he is purveyor by royal patent. It may be mentioned that Prince Edward has already a signature of his own. It was traced by his own royal digits, guided by the hand of an equerry.

On state occasions the prince is arrayed in cloth of gold. His head is covered by a crown of starched and gilded linen, just as Pope Leo has a pasteboard tiara to give his head a rest from the gold and gem studded one. He is then carried by a royal lady in waiting. That means that whoever carries this babe must have royal blood in her veins. Another curious thing about the prince is that no more than four persons may be in his nursery at any one time. When he is attired in royal robes the peers must kneel to kiss his hand on entering his presence. Of course, no bats may be worn in his presence. In York House, Mrs. Gladstone had to take her bonnet off before entering his nursery.

When H. R. H. is asleep a flag floats from his residence. When he is awake the flag is taken down. When he leaves his home the flag is hung out of the window of his nursery.

Another unexpected thing in the life of the prince is the extreme publicity of it. He is perpetually being photographed, and the photographs are thrown broadcast all over England. Wherever he goes the fact of his coming is proclaimed. Lots of people congregate about his two homes to get a glimpse of him, and Mrs. Buika carries him out in her arms to the coach in the most public manner. This publicity and publicity are in accordance with the time-honored custom of the British royal family to be as free with the people as possible.

Now, this little prince reduced his baby cousin to a mere nonentity. His baby cousin is Lady Alexandra Duff, and she was heiress to the British throne until he arrived on the scene. He is still a tiny baby, notwithstanding his royal patents and his H. R. H., but upon the growth of his character and the development of his nature, depend to a vital degree the destinies of that immense power, Great Britain; for this baby was born, one might say, for the express purpose of ruling that vast empire.
